FOREWORD

Phil Erickson's study is a valuable tool for researchers into Alexandria's past. This project started much like all of Phil's other projects--with a great idea on how to learn more about archaeology through the use of written records. Phil always tells us "younger" ones that we can get the back pains from digging while he gets the finger cramps from taking notes from primary documents!

The study of the Alexandria Water Company records mushroomed before our eyes. Phil simply wanted to see if he could find out when different households hooked up to the water pipes to make some estimates on when the wells would have been turned into trash dumps and privies. Yet, when he visited the Alexandria Water Company he discovered a gold mine of information waiting to be explored.

Phil found that the original water permits (as shown in the front piece) are filed in the Water Company folders marked with the contemporary address. Sounds logical? True, but this is quite a find for Alexandria researchers, because the current address system did not go into use until the end of the nineteenth century. This situation has made researching properties a great challenge in Alexandria. Phil's study provides a listing of owners and tenants of households applying for water permits as early as 1852. The information is cross tabulated in a variety of ways so that researchers can search by permit number, address, owner names and tenant name. We have Vince Anania to thank for this excellent computer base.

One word of caution: We have not checked every entry to corroborate Phil's assumption that the historic water permit information applies to the current file address. Phil did check some entries, and they are accurate. However, researchers please use this information as a guide to further research. It is not a final statement on property ownership or residency. At this point in our studies, deeds and tax assessment rolls are still the most conclusive evidence for owners and residents.

We appreciate the assistance and interest of the Virginia American Water Company in this project. The Company's archives are an important part of our City's heritage.

PREFACE

When we started this Project some time back, it seemed it might be useful to survey those who had the initial supplies of local water piped into their homes or business establishments.

It was an interesting challenge, and soon became a boon, as we saw it, for historians, archaeologists, sociologists and others interested in a background of Alexandria. The next question was where to start? Fortunately, there has been a continuity in water suppliers for the City. While the original companies have long since gone, the original records have been retained by the present water suppliers -- the American/Virginia Water Company. This was fortuitous, but even more to the point for the researcher, the various water suppliers have been loath to change the original permit numbers. For example, the household which originally had permit number 257 assigned, still has that number on its water bill! Hence, we were able to determine the original "1000 Pipers" -- those first one thousand households which obtained water. Far more surprising, though was the fact that Permit number #1 was issued in 1852, Permit number #1,000 was not issued until 1922!

Why did I embark on this study? Everything I've researched as an Alexandria Archaeology volunteer has been associated with water. When we discovered that the original water company permits were still in Alexandria, the potential of this issuance peaked my curiosity. I believe that this index will be a valuable tool in assisting others studying their homes or particular people. The information will also help those interested in understanding changes in the City, urban amenities and public health.

Who could afford this luxury? The wealthy and businesses. You can see this as you examine the first to apply for water service in 1852. No longer was it necessary to carry water from wells. Service meant that the clean water came into a property through a pipe in the backyard or in the kitchen.

To make this study as useful as possible to researchers, we have indexed the water permit information in four ways.

The first index is a master list arranged sequentially by Permit number. It includes the property owner, name the tenant name, the current street address and other ancillary information which appeared on the original water application. The second index is an alphabetical listing of property owner names with accompanying data. A tenant list in alphabetical order comprises the third index.

Finally, the fourth index is organized alphabetically by street name and current property address.

We hope this study will be a contribution to the history of Alexandria, and may help others in their search for their past. Naturally, this was not a one person project and all due credit must be made to our City's archaeologists, Dr. Pamela J. Cressey and Dr. Steven J. Shephard. Capt. Vince Anania, USN, (Ret.), and Capt. Charles Gardner, USN (Ret.), assisted in the research and computer indexing. Capt. William Arnold USN (Ret.) rendered much assistance in the early days of this project.

Lastly, I must acknowledge the tremendous assistance provided by Virginia/American Water Company. All of the staff guided me through pitfalls, perils and other water hazards.
